Continuation of 3. NOTE: Regarding Applicant's arguments concerning the Schwartz reference failing to disclose the claimed choosing means comprising a context menu, the Examiner respectfully disagrees. It is noted that Applicant's claim language does not explicitly recite that the choosing means allows user to choose a display area from a plurality of different display areas; merely that a display area is chosen. Applicant's claim language also does not exclude display of information in a predetermined window or area of a window. Thus, the Examiner contends that Schwartz could be interpreted to read on the claim language since associated information of an object selected in a "context menu" is automatically displayed in a window (see figs 8 and 9, 800).
